Taxis and buses could be sharing lanes forever

Pilot program success. Travel times more than two minutes shorter for passengers along some routes: Report

REBEKAH FUNK
The Canadian Press
exclusively for Metro

It will be "all go, no stop" for taxis travelling in Vancouver bus lanes, if city council votes to make a pilot program permanent next week.

More than a year has passed since taxi companies teamed up with Coast Mountain Bus Company and city officials to cut travel times and fares for what they call "an extension of transit."

A new report from the city says allowing taxis in bus lanes has reduced commute times on grid-locked corridors by as much as 32 per cent during rush hours.

Travel times were more than two minutes shorter for passengers along some routes, says the report, which recommends council makes the temporary program permanent in a Wednesday vote.

Permission should also be sought from the provincial government to allow cab drivers to travel in bus lanes that come within 800 metres of arterial highway near Highway 1 and the Stanley Park Causeway, recommends the report.

While bus drivers initially complained taxis' newly found freedoms were causing delays and safety hazards, those issues have largely been resolved, says the report.

The taxi association says things have calmed after a "learning curve," and they'll continue to educate their employees about safety.

TransLink and Coast Mountain say their companies would have "no concerns" regarding the pilot's extension, as long as cab drivers continued to respect the no-stopping rule.

The taxi association has imposed penalties for cabbies caught stopping in bus lanes, include driving suspensions and a "name-and-shame" system that's broadcast to cabs via an in-vehicle messaging system to deter others.

"While there were high numbers of taxis observed to be stopping in the bus lanes at the onset of the trial, the numbers dropped dramatically with the penalty structure," the report says.

General Fusion in Burnaby is on a mission to build the world's first full-scale nuclear fusion generator. GENERAL FUSION/CONTRIBUTED

Italian competitor doesn't worry local physicists

Solving the puzzle. An Italian scientist has been claiming to have demonstrated an elusive theoretical reaction called cold fusion

Physicists in B.C. who are competing in the global race to solve the world's energy problems are undeterred by reports that a major breakthrough in cold fusion has been independently verified in Italy.

"Unless this is one of the most elaborate hoaxes in scientific history it looks like the world may well be about to change," wrote Mark Gibbs for Forbes earlier this week.

Gibbs, a tech writer, is referring to an unpublished paper written by a panel of scientists that says it has tested a device invented by notoriously secretive Italian scientist Andrea Rossi.

Rossi has been claiming for the last couple of years to have successfully demonstrated an elusive, theoretical reaction called cold fusion. If the paper passes peer-review, it means Rossi's Energy Catalyzer (E-Cat) has tapped into an energy source 10 times more powerful than conventional sources.

But Michael Delage, vice-president of business development at General Fusion in Burnaby, said it's too early to say whether Rossi's invention, which so far has not been rigorously tested enough to secure a patent, could be a game-changer.

"Rossi has been making news on and off for the last few years," he said.

"You've got to show that you can build things at scale and reliability and you've got to be able to produce power for the grid — so who knows?"

General Fusion is one of the few labs in the world that is trying to build a power plant capable of catalyzing nuclear fusion, which is the atomic reaction that fuels stars.

By contrast, cold fusion would occur at or near room temperature, and has largely been rejected as a failed experiment by the mainstream scientific community.

Delage said General Fusion will continue its quest to demonstrate nuclear fusion, also known as hot fusion, armed with $40 million in venture capital, a team of 11 PhDs and a support staff of more than 50.

So far, it has built 14 of 200 high-speed pistons it needs to complete a full-scale proof-of-concept fusion generator, and the company figures with enough capital the plant could be complete within three years.

To build the rest, Delage said, it will just need to raise another $150 million — but that is pocket change when compared to the potential fiscal and environmental rewards of providing cheap, plentiful and clean energy for generations to come.

A rare event

Record rainfall, snowmelt caused fatal landslide, report says

A massive landslide that ripped through a small hamlet in southeastern B.C. last year, killing four people, was caused by a deluge of rain and a late spring snowmelt that triggered the largest slide to hit the region in at least 12,000 years, a report into the disaster concludes.

The report, released Thursday by the Regional District of Central Kootenay, makes a number of recommendations to ensure the disaster that struck Johnsons Landing last July doesn't repeat itself, but it also suggests the slide was unprecedented in size and nearly impossible to predict.

The slide struck in the morning of July 12, 2012, sending 320,000 cubic metres of soil, trees and rock down an area known as the Gar Creek channel, hitting several homes at speeds of up to 150 kilometres per hour.

Valentine Webber, his 17- and 22-year-old daughters Rachel and Diana, and German woman Petra Frehse were buried in the debris, prompting a frantic rescue operation that was hampered by harsh weather and unstable conditions. All four died.

"Record June rainfall and late snowmelt saturated the soils on the slope above the community and triggered the landslide," says the regional district's report.

"A landslide of similar size has not occurred in this area since deglaciation (last 12,000 years)."

The Lord's Rain. Anonymous donor saves DTES shower facility

An anonymous donor has stepped in to save a unique Downtown Eastside shower facility that was in danger of closing by committing to provide a whole year's worth of funding, totalling $24,000.

The Lord's Rain, located next to Pigeon Park, has been providing clean showers, coffee and breakfast to low-income residents for five years, but after the recession hit, its regular donations began to dry up.

After reading about it on Metro's front page last month, a businessman who gave his name but asked for it not to be published contacted the Gospel Mission Society (not to be confused with the Union Gospel Mission), which runs The Lord's Rain.

"I just thought it was terrible that they were shutting down showers. I mean, the people down there don't have a lot, but the least they need is a shower," said the donor, who also owns and supports a 52-bed women's emergency shelter at 625 Powell St.

Other donors who read the story donated another $4,000 to help keep the facility open, which means their space will be secure until at least July 2014.

"For someone to come on and say, 'Hey, I'll cover you for the first year,' wow, that's a big load off our minds," said associate pastor and longtime volunteer Drew Snider.

Rodeo fight. Police investigating suspect for assault on protester

Surrey Mounties plan on speaking to the woman who was caught on video Saturday making racist remarks and getting into a physical fight with an animal-rights protester outside the Cloverdale Rodeo.

Jennifer Johanson did an interview with Global News on Wednesday in which she said the protester, Shukria, started the fight by saying, "I'm not a Hindu, I'm Muslim, and I'm a terrorist and I'll bomb your house."

"I just kind of lost it," she told Global.

She said she feels bad about repeatedly hurling racist slurs at Shukria, and that "if she wanted an apology I'll give her an apology."

Cpl. Bert Paquet said Thursday the file is active and the investigator in charge of it plans on getting in touch with Johanson on Friday.

Caucus heads back to work this summer

Pressing items on agenda. Legislature to reconvene over summer months to pass balanced budget, says Premier Clark

Passing a balanced budget, going on a trade mission to Asia and establishing labour peace with teachers are among B.C. Premier Christy Clark's top priorities as she announced she will recall the legislature this summer.

Speaking to her newly elected caucus members, as well as defeated candidates, for the first time since the Liberals' come-from-behind election win last week, Clark said the party must now make good on its campaign promises.

"So this summer we're going to call back the legislature," she told party members in a hotel ballroom Thursday.

"We're going to pass balanced budget 2013. We are going to seize the vast opportunity that natural gas presents for our future, both here at home and by securing markets for that overseas."

Clark said passing a balanced budget is the most pressing item on her agenda.

She campaigned heavily on balancing the books, while the NDP countered the Liberals' efforts by maintaining that their budget was actually $800 million in deficit.

Criticized by the NDP as a "fact-free budget," the Liberals' plan includes government-wide spending controls and some tax increases.

Clark also promised that a thriving liquefied natural gas industry would eliminate the province's debt and create tens of thousands of jobs. She said Thursday she is formalizing plans for a trip to Asia, where she hopes to find investors who can deliver on those promises.

She also repeated an earlier pledge to secure a 10-year-deal with the province's teachers.

The proposal, which includes indexing wage increases in line with other public servants, was scorned by the B.C. Teachers Federation last year as merely an election ploy and an attempt to interfere with the regular bargaining process.

City task force goes digital

Mayor Gregor Robertson's newest task force has gone digital.

In a Twitter Town Hall on Thursday, Robertson launched the Engaged City Task Force's new handle, @engagedcity, and fielded questions relating to civic engagement.

Many posts under the #engagedcity hashtag centred around affordable housing, as well as the proposed Block Party Day, which would see multiple neighbourhoods hosting block parties on the same day.

Other posters asked whether the city would implement a ward system, in which councillors are elected to represent individual neighbourhoods or wards.

But Robertson quickly struck down the idea. Instead, the city is considering "informal councillor liaisons to help residents with local issues," he said.

Also on hand to answer was Hootsuite CEO Ryan Holmes.

"Excited about how social can help with this #engagedcity," he tweeted.

Man claims pharmacist gave wrong meds

Medical malpractice case. Lawsuit alleges deteriorating health due to pharmacist changing epileptic's prescription without notifying him

A pharmacist employed with one of Canada's grocery giants is accused of medical malpractice after a man with epilepsy claims he was given the wrong medication.

A B.C. Supreme Court lawsuit launched this week claims both the unnamed pharmacist and Loblaws Inc. are responsible for Garrett Nadeau's deteriorating health because his standing prescription was changed without notice.

None of the statements have been proven in court and no statement of defence had yet been filed by Loblaws.

The statement of claim says both the pharmacist and the Langley Superstore drugstore operated by Loblaws failed to exercise reasonable care when they switched his medication in May 2011 without notifying him.

Nadeau, unaware of the prescription change, says in the statement that he suddenly began experiencing seizures, including one in July that caused a concussion and hospitalization.

Prior to the incident, Nadeau's lawsuit claims he was able to control his seizures with drugs for a decade using the meds prescribed by his doctor and lead a "normal, active ... life." REBEKAH FUNK/THE CANADIAN PRESS, EXCLUSIVELY FOR METRO

Fired. Man who dumped iron into ocean dumped

A man who garnered international scrutiny for dumping iron sulphate in the Pacific Ocean has been fired from his posts as a director and officer of the Haida Salmon Restoration Corporation (HSRC).

The firing of Russ George comes in the midst of a strategic review of the company's governance and business plans, said the HSRC board of directors in a statement Thursday.

"The board and our community has decided to recalibrate this business so that it moves forward in a constructive fashion and effectively responds to legitimate concerns raised by various stakeholders around the world," said Ken Rae, chief councillor at Old Massett Village, which raised $2.5 million to fund the HSRC.

John Disney, the current president, will serve as interim CEO.

George, an American businessman, teamed up with the HSRC in 2012 to dump 100 tonnes of the iron sulphide in international waters off Haida Gwaii in hopes it would provoke an algae bloom.

He hypothesized the bloom would remove carbon from the atmosphere and boost salmon stocks, an important resource to the Old Massett community.

Although George deemed the experiment a success, he soon came under scrutiny after concerns were raised he may have broken national and international sanctions against ocean fertilization.

Environment Canada has launched an investigation into the rogue experiment and reportedly executed search warrants in relation to the investigation in March.

For years, George had been on a crusade to convince the environmental community of the benefits of depositing iron-rich dust in the ocean. In 2007, his company, Planktos, attempted to release 100 tonnes of the chemical in waters off the Galapagos Islands, a World Heritage Site, but was barred by governments.

Although some scientists agree iron can cause algae growth, there is no conclusive evidence to support George's claims that blooms absorb large amounts of carbon from the atmosphere.

Meanwhile, some scientists fear an algae bloom could cause "dead zones" — areas where there is not enough oxygen to sustain life.

That itty-bitty house on Craigslist? It's a joke!

Would you live in a house that had just 126 square feet? What if it was shiny and new with all the amenities, but smaller?

Would a retractable ladder for getting up to the 50-square-foot sleeping loft seal the deal?

In famously unaffordable Vancouver, renters might jump at the chance to pay $750 a month to rent this pint-sized house that appeared for rent in an ad on Craigslist on Wednesday, but they'll be sad to learn it doesn't exist.

"Imagine a house to yourself!" reads the ad. "Brand new mini house has everything you need, designed for a person living on a tight budget who wants a central location. Bathroom is small 28 inches by four feet but has a toilet, shower and sink."

Craigslisters who replied to the post hoping to move in with their cat next month probably won't hear back from the owner, who called himself Kevin and wouldn't provide a last name.

He said the house isn't a house at all, but a tool shed next to a property his family owns near Seventh Avenue and Ontario Street.

"We just finished building a little tool shed and we were thinking that could actually be a little house," Kevin said. "We just wanted to see what kind of money we could get for it."

The ad generated 64 comments on the Vancouver Reddit page.

"What is this, a house for ants?" joked one person who posted, in an apparent reference to a scene in the movie Zoolander where the protagonist mistakes a model structure for the real thing.

But the commenter who wrote, "I totally thought this was a joke," was more right than they knew.

Heiress leaves $34 million to foundation

Faye Wightman, president and CEO of the Vancouver Foundation, said Thursday that she wishes she could say thank you to Judith Jardine and that "she could share in the excitement of what her gift is going to do."

Judith Jardine kept a low profile in her 82 years.

The millionaire heiress lived alone in a 9,000-square-foot mansion in Vancouver, never married and had no children.

On Thursday, seven years after her death, Jardine's life and legacy finally got some attention with the announcement of a $40-million donation to the Vancouver Foundation, the UBC Faculty of Medicine and the B.C. wing of the United Church of Canada.

"Judith Jardine made an uncharacteristically big splash in her passing and I think the ripples will continue to be felt for years to come," said Faye Wightman, president and CEO of the Vancouver Foundation.

The foundation will receive most of the donation, $34 million, to establish an endowment fund that will generate about $1.4 million a year. The United Church and the foundation will share the endowment's income. The UBC Faculty of Medicine will receive $6.4 million.

Brian Kladko, a Faculty of Medicine communications manager, said the donation is the largest estate gift the school has received.

Jardine was the granddaughter of Willard Kitchen, who was a director of the Pacific Eastern Railway, BC Rail's predecessor. Kitchen built a massive estate in the Southlands community of Vancouver in 1925 for $10,000. Known as the WilMar estate, it is now valued at about $8.5 million.

Jardine lived at WilMar until her death in 2006. Executors spent years tracking down Jardine's various assets and evaluating her estate. At one point they were searching for a safety deposit box. When they found it, the box contained $6 million in Canada Savings Bonds.

Impaired-driving case

Woman guilty in death of colleague

A Kelowna woman has been found guilty of impaired and dangerous driving in the death of a co-worker near Merritt two years ago.

Provincial court heard that construction-site employees Amanda Freeman, 27, and Rafael Heredia, 30, were drinking at a pub with colleagues before the crash that claimed Heredia's life. Freeman was behind the wheel on their commute home when her vehicle crossed the centre line of the Okanagan Connector and slammed into a transport truck.

Judge Chris Cleavely rejected Freeman's testimony that she drank only two beers, as well as arguments from her lawyer that Heredia forced her to drive, that she had a learners' licence and that poor weather caused the crash. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Breast cancer. Ont. researcher explains breakthrough

Western University's John P. Wiebe has turned up hormones that could change the way some breast-cancer patients are treated. ANGELA MULLINS/METRO IN LONDON

The lead researcher of a Western University breast-cancer study says he has identified new hormones that "may suppress breast cancer and stimulate the regression of breast tumours."

Prof. John P. Wiebe's work was recently published in the Breast Cancer Research journal.

"Basically, we've got the first explanation of what causes receptor-negative breast cancer," said Wiebe, who works in London, Ont.

There are two types of breast cancer: Receptor-negative and receptor-positive. Receptor-negative cases, which Wiebe says have the higher mortality rate of the two, do not respond to hormonal therapies such as tamoxifen. That means patients are forced into chemo or radiation therapy immediately.

Wiebe's discovery, however, could turn the tide.

Drone strikes necessary in fight against terror: Obama

Security policy. U.S. president also announces a renewed push to close Guantanamo Bay

U.S. President Barack Obama on Thursday defended America's controversial drone attacks as legal, effective and a necessary linchpin in an evolving U.S. counterterrorism policy. But he acknowledged the targeted strikes are no "cure-all" and said he is haunted by the civilians unintentionally killed.

The president also announced a renewed push to close the Guantanamo Bay detention centre in Cuba, including lifting a moratorium on prisoner transfers to Yemen. However, shutting the prison will still require help from Republicans reluctant to back Obama's call to move some detainees to U.S. prisons and try them in civilian courts.

Obama framed his address as an attempt to redefine the nature and scope of terror threats facing the U.S.

"Neither I, nor any president, can promise the total defeat of terror," Obama said in remarks at the National Defence University. "What we can do ... is dismantle networks that pose a direct danger, and make it less likely for new groups to gain a foothold."

The highly secretive program of unmanned spy drones has faced criticism from congressional lawmakers who have questioned its scope and legality. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Haunted by deaths

The president defended targeted drone killings as both effective and legal.

- He acknowledged the civilian deaths that sometimes result.
- "For me, and those in my chain of command, these deaths will haunt us as long as we live," he said.

RCMP given Senate documents

Expense-claim scandal. Debate continues to rage over report as Sen. Duffy shrugs off suggestions he should resign

The Senate has turned over documents to the Mounties to help their investigation into improper expense claims.

Senate Speaker Noel Kinsella says the RCMP's sensitive and international investigations unit is examining the claims of senators Mike Duffy, Mac Harb and Patrick Brazeau.

The police asked for documents related to the Senate's travel and expenses policies.

A debate is still raging over whether Conservatives on a committee reviewing Duffy's expenses whitewashed their report into the matter. The controversy grew Thursday as the Conservative in charge of the probe admitted he got advice from Stephen Harper's team.

Sen. David Tkachuk, one of a three-member special subcommittee studying Duffy's housing expenses, told Maclean's magazine that he spoke to people in Harper's office — including former chief of staff Nigel Wright — about the issue.

Duffy spoke out Thursday for the first time since the scandal erupted last week, insisting that he looks forward to a complete airing of all the facts and dismissing suggestions he should resign his Senate seat.

Ford theatre. Toronto mayor's chief of staff gets shown the door

The chief of staff to Toronto's embattled Mayor Rob Ford was escorted by security from city hall Thursday as allegations the mayor had been caught on videotape smoking crack cocaine continued to swirl.

Mark Towhey said he did not resign but his departure had not come as a shock to him.

"The mayor and I spoke about it this afternoon," Towhey said as reporters trailed him through the underground parking lot. Towhey refused to elaborate on the conversation or say what advice he had given Ford about the alleged video.

"My conversations with the mayor are between the mayor and me," Towhey said.

Last week, both the American-based website Gawker.com and Torstar News Service reported they had seen — but not obtained — a video made by a drug dealer who was shopping it around for six figures.

Gawker has been trying to raise $200,000 to buy and post the video, reaching more than $157,000 by Thursday evening.

Towhey's departure comes a day after the Toronto District Catholic School Board announced it had dropped Ford as volunteer coach of his favourite high school football team, the Don Bosco Eagles.

Alleged would-be terrorist wants lawyer to cite Qur'an

Accused in VIA Rail case. Suspect says he does not recognize the secular Criminal Code

Police allege Chiheb Esseghaier and another man were conspiring to derail a VIA Rail passenger train. FRANK GUNN/THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

A man charged in the alleged plot to attack a VIA Rail passenger train says he wants to be represented by a lawyer who will use the Qur'an as a reference in his case.

"I am agreed to have a lawyer," Chiheb Esseghaier said, appearing in a Toronto court by video link from jail on Thursday.

"But I wish this lawyer can co-operate with me, because I need the holy book as reference for my judgment. I don't want a book written by humans."

The 30-year-old Montreal man told court during an earlier appearance that he does not recognize the authority of the secular Criminal Code.

Both Esseghaier and 35-year-old Raed Jaser of Toronto are charged with conspiracy to murder for the benefit of a terrorist group, participating in a terrorist group and conspiring to interfere with transportation facilities for the benefit of a terrorist group.

The RCMP calls the case the first known alleged plot in Canada directed by al-Qaida.

The justice of the peace told Esseghaier he would have to discuss his wishes with his lawyer once one has been assigned.

He was scheduled to return to court June 3 to provide an update on his request. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Second suspect

Jaser silent on the issue

Raed Jaser also appeared by video link and was scheduled for another court appearance on June 25 as his case goes through the disclosure process.

One of his lawyers, Brydie Bethell, said she has not heard Jaser making similar remarks about the legitimacy of Canada's criminal laws.

"The client has not made any comment like that to me," she said.

London. Muslim radicals say they know suspect in bloody street slashing

A man seen wielding a butcher knife after the killing of a British soldier on the streets of London was described as a convert to Islam who took part in demonstrations with a banned radical group, two Muslim hardliners said on Thursday.

Police raided houses in connection with the slaying. In addition to the two suspects who were hospitalized after being shot by police, authorities said they had arrested a man and a woman, both 29, on suspicion of conspiracy to murder.

Authorities have not identified either wounded suspect.

Anjem Choudary, the former head of the radical group al-Muhajiroun, said that the man depicted in a startling video of the event was named Michael Adebolajo, a Christian who converted to Islam around 2003 and took part in several demonstrations by the group.

Omar Bakri Muhammad, who now lives in Lebanon but had been a radical Muslim preacher in London, also said he recognized the man as Adebolajo and said he attended his lectures in the early 2000s.

Bakri, speaking from Lebanon, said he remembers Adebolajo as a "shy person" who was keen to learn about Islam and asked interesting questions. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Man pleads guilty in Nova Scotia chained-teen case

David James LeBlanc.
Crown to seek eight to 12 years in prison at sentencing hearing scheduled for June 14

A 48-year-old man pleaded guilty Thursday to kidnapping, confining and sexually assaulting a 16-year-old boy at a cabin in rural Nova Scotia last fall.

David James LeBlanc appeared in Nova Scotia Supreme Court in Bridgewater, where he entered guilty pleas to charges of kidnapping, forcible confinement, sexual assault, uttering threats and breach of conditions.

Two other charges — sexual assault causing bodily harm and administering a noxious substance with intent to cause bodily harm — were withdrawn.

"As a mother, I just wanted him to suffer," the victim's mother said outside court Thursday, her hands shaking.

She said her son, who cannot be identified, is trying to put the incident behind him, adding she was glad he doesn't have to "relive" the abuse through a trial.

LeBlanc was charged after a woman reported in September that a barefoot teenager arrived at her doorstep in Upper Chelsea, about 130 kilometres southwest of Halifax, chained at his wrists and ankles. At the time, the RCMP said they believe the boy was held captive for 10 to 14 days before he was able to escape.

LeBlanc also pleaded guilty Thursday to making and distributing child pornography as well as sexual interference in a separate case involving two boys, aged five and two.

Crown prosecutor Lloyd Tancock said the guilty pleas mean that what would have likely been a lengthy trial with up to 20 witnesses for one case alone will now not go ahead. He said it also shielded the young victims from having to testify. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Search

LeBlanc was arrested Sept. 30 in northern Ontario after a Canada-wide manhunt.

- Police also searched for 31-year-old Wayne Alan Cunningham, whose body was later found near the area where LeBlanc was arrested. Foul play was not suspected.

Tornado victim laid to rest

Mourners leave a funeral service Thursday in Oklahoma City for Antonia Candelaria, a nine-year-old girl killed at a Moore, Okla., elementary school that took a direct hit in Monday's tornado. Electronics importers say feds duped them over tariff breaks

Paper trail. Coalition says it has documents showing officials let products in duty-free, knowing levies would be claimed later on

The flap over electronics tariffs has also involved iPods. On Wednesday, Finance Minister Jim Flaherty was asked at a committee hearing about exemptions for iPods. GETTY IMAGES FILE

Importers of popular electronics such as big-screen TVs and MP3 players are ramping up their fight against federal tariff changes, accusing the government of misleading them by offering tariff breaks that it planned to claw back later.

Importers of televisions are already on the hook for about $16 million in retroactive duties from 2011 after last year's crackdown on a particular tariff exemption that has become a political football.

Electronics brought to Canada under exemption 9948 are supposed to be used continuously for four years while hooked up to a computer, and importers are required to provide an "end-user certificate" proving that's how each device was used.

No such end-user certificates for consumer electronics exist, something officials at the Canada Border Services Agency have acknowledged in internal emails.

Now a coalition of importers says it has documents that prove border officials allowed them to import products duty-free, knowing the government would claim the tariffs and penalty costs at a later date.

NDP reaction

- New Democrats, whom the Conservatives accused of planning an "iPod tax" in 2010, jumped on the latest revelations.
- "It's now clear that despite repeated denials, the Conservatives have been meticulously planning to impose a tax on iPods and other electronic goods and apply it retroactively," Murray Rankin, the NDP critic for national revenue, said in a release.

Feds may fire back over U.S. meat labelling rules

The federal government is threatening "retaliatory measures" against the U.S. in a dispute over meat labelling rules that Ottawa and the World Trade Organization consider discriminatory. The U.S. has announced rules on country-of-origin labelling that would track beef and hogs through the processing and distribution systems. THE CANADIAN PRESS

1 YouTube Comedy Week. The future of comedy is on display this week as YouTube's first annual Comedy Week showcases the best funny stuff on its channel, with its comic stars like Jenna Marbles, Smosh, Epic Meal Time and Danisnotonfire — who all became famous there. Lesson? Instead of hitting amateur comedy clubs or driving to L.A. in your beat-up Jeep, just go on YouTube to showcase your talent.

2 Boston Rob. Reality fans love him for his appearances on Survivor (he was "sole survivor" in Season 22) and The Amazing Race. Well now Rob Mariano, a.k.a. Boston Rob, has released a book called The Boston Rob Rulebook: Strategies for Life, based around his strategic thinking and social awareness that you can apply to your own life. Because life is really one big game of survivor.

3 Tumblr says Yahoo! In its continued efforts to put itself on the map again, Yahoo bought media network Tumblr for $1.1 billion US. This could be a huge move in Yahoo's comeback attempt, as CEO Marissa Mayer tries to breathe new life into this Internet icon. Now this will definitely make Yahoo hipper, though some may equate purchasing indie Tumblr as selling out to aging hipsters.

4 @ThatEricAlper. With 127,000-plus followers on Twitter, Canadian music expert Eric Alper links to some of the best music/pop culture gems on the web, from 50 albums to play after a breakup, to nine people who were banned from Saturday Night Live, to a super-cut of film characters screaming "Noooooooooo!" Follow him to be a cool cat.

5 Roboteyes. This synthpop band calls themselves "the soundtrack to the greatest John Hughes movie never made." With their new-wave-era sound, roboteyes' self-titled debut is well worth a listen at roboteyes.bandcamp.com. Their song Break My Heart should be a hit song. It would have been in the '80s.

6 Buzzfeed. It's one of the hottest news sites on the planet right now, and what it does better than anyone is capture and fuel posts going viral — whether it's pictures of cute cats, photo bombs, YouTube videos or breaking news. Buzzfeed gets that people want to discover and share things — from the silly to the serious and everything in between.

7 MS Walk. MS Walks happen in 160 communities across Canada, bringing together people who have been impacted by multiple sclerosis and raising money for research and support programs. I'm walking in one this Sunday in Peterborough, Ont., with my wife and kids in support of our friend who has been battling the disease. Learn more about these walks at mswalks.ca.

8 Hadfield's space guitar. Chris Hadfield didn't just make space travel really cool — he also made more people want to be guitar heroes. After Hadfield performed Bowie's Space Oddity in space while playing a Vancouver-made Larrivée guitar, that guitar has now been brought back into production for a limited run due to demand. The first guitar rock star on Mars could be you.

9 Kevin Durant. His jersey was photographed hanging amidst the rubble from the tornado in Moore, Okla. And the NBA star proved once again how down-to-Earth and charitable he is when he donated $1 million to help the recovery efforts there. His Oklahoma City Thunder and the NBA soon followed suit, donating $1 million as well.

10 Teens and Twitter. A new study from the Pew Research Center reveals Twitter is becoming a go-to social-media destination for teens who say there is too much drama (and parent surveillance) on Facebook. When parents see this, they will get on Twitter and start following their kids there. Dear teens, there is no escape in the social-media world either. Now go clean your rooms.

11 Avery. Speaking of teens, my daughter Avery becomes a teenager next week — yes, she turns 13. I always wanted to give her a shout-out on this list — I love her so much (and my youngest daughter, Chloe). So Avery, there you go. Cool Dad? Yeah, OK, maybe. Now go clean your room.

Synopsis

Picking up where Fast Five left off, when we first meet Dom Toretto (Vin Diesel) and company, they are wealthy outlaws, living in countries with no extradition to the U.S. Their quiet lives are disrupted when a gang led by super villain Owen Shaw (Luke Evans) stages a daring raid that threatens international security. A task force led by Luke Hobbs (Dwayne Johnson) calls on the expertise of the furious fugitives to help bring Shaw to justice.

Could crash test dummies stand in for the cast of Fast & Furious 6? HANDOUT

Reel Guys

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Fast & Furious medley

Nothing new. Now at the half-dozen mark, auto action series' latest film is more like a greatest hits mashup than its own creation

Richard: Mark, this is the culmination of the previous five. A greatest hits — literally, there are some wild crashes here — featuring characters from most of the films in the series. All the old faves are back — drug lord Braga, Hobbs and even Letty who was presumed dead in the last instalment — in a story that doesn't make a great deal of sense, but if it was supposed to make sense it would be called Sedans and Sensibility or maybe Of Miatas and Men. But no, this is a Fast & Furious movie that plays fast and furious with believability but still delivers a pretty good time at the movies. What's your take?

MB: SPOILER ALERT: THERE ARE CAR CRASHES IN THIS MOVIE. Richard, I'm so glad we got a sixth instalment of the franchise because somehow there were just too many unexplored nuances in the first five. But if it's action you're after, you won't be disappointed. You're right; the story is secondary; in fact, almost irrelevant. But the relationships among the characters also seem unimportant here. There seemed to be more emotional connection in Fast and Furious 2, 3, and 5 — or was it 1, 3, and 4? Anyway, you get my point. But things certainly go boom.

RC: They sure do. The action scenes here feature the fanciest stunt driving this side of Evel Knievel. To quote the movie, "We're talking vehicular warfare!" And that's what people want to see from these movies. Sure the talk of friendship and loyalty is the overriding theme, but that wouldn't mean much if cars don't become airborne before they burst into flames. What did you think of Vin Diesel?

MB: SPOILER ALERT: THERE ARE FIST FIGHTS IN THIS MOVIE. Richard, Vin Diesel has less personality than some of the cars. And Paul Walker must have been cast ages ago to make him look like a trained actor. The truth is, I'd watch these movies if they used crash test dummies in the leads. The pyrotechnics are dazzling and the cars are great to look at. Toward the end of the film there's a stunt that's so breathtaking it transcends the actors involved. So Diesel is as good as the film needs him to be.

RC: I liked how every line he speaks sounds as though he's dragging it through sandpaper.

MB: If there were ever a guy who needed auto-tune, it's Vin Diesel.

Comedy/Drama

Love Is All You Need

Director. Susan Bier

Stars. Pierce Brosnan, Trine Dyrholm

Ida (Dyrholm), a Danish hairdresser, returns home from a final round of chemo to find her husband and his accountant in flagrante. Ida leaves for Italy to attend their daughter's wedding, alone, crushed and yet relieved. She has a meltdown at the airport and crashes into the luxury car of a businessman (Brosnan). Dyrholm is tremendously appealing and Brosnan finds a role that recalls on his own experiences with his late wife. Together they're magic.

ANNE BRODIE

Animation

Epic

Director. Chris Wedge

Stars. Colin Farrell, Josh Hutcherson

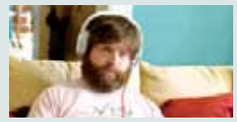
Parents, get ready for an epic disappointment. Though colourful and exciting enough for the kids, most of the celebrity cast phone in lacklustre voice performances, and the computer animation just isn't spectacular enough to compensate. The story — about little forest people battling an evil corrupter of nature — ends up feeling like a low-rent FernGully (if you remember that one), without the environmental message. Funny guys Aziz Ansari and Jason Sudeikis stand out, and bring the only laughs for the over-10 crowd.

COLIN MCNEIL

Comedy



The Hangover Part III

Director. Ami Ayalon, Avi Dichter

Stars. Bradley Cooper, Ed Helms, Zach Galifianakis

The first Hangover movie was a dark, hilarious look at a bachelor party gone horribly wrong. After an unfunny carbon-copy sequel the series ends with a heist film, sans the monkey and, unfortunately, most of the laughs. This time the Wolfpack are coerced by a gangster into tracking down Mr. Chow (Ken Jeong) and gold bricks worth $21 million. Part three is as vulgar as the first two, but the story is stuck in limbo somewhere between heist flick and comedy.

RICHARD CROUSE

Movie tie-ins. A big screen adaptation of a novel can boost book sales, but does it influence our reading experience?

Do the faces of big stars pop into your mind when you're reading? HANDOUT

Book lovers who haven't yet read The Great Gatsby but hope to do so before seeing the new Baz Luhrmann film adaptation may still find themselves being influenced by the Hollywood machine.

Like many novels that are adapted for the big screen, the 1925 F. Scott Fitzgerald literary classic has been reprinted with a movie tie-in cover featuring the stars — in this case, a tuxedo-clad Leonardo DiCaprio looming over his castmates in all their Roaring Twenties glamour.

While movie tie-in books can drive sales of novels, they can also irk some readers who find their imaginations tainted by the cinematic interpretations depicted on the cover.

"When you read the book, it doesn't matter how they describe that character, you're most likely going to see the cover character," author David Korinetz, who runs the book distribution company Red Tuque Books in Penticton, B.C., said in a telephone interview.

Still, he said he's not bothered by movie tie-ins, noting they do what a cover is supposed to do — attract the eye.

"If I see a book sitting there and it's got an actor I recognize, I will most likely pick it up to see what it's about," said Korinetz, who's self-published three fantasy books.

"It would make no difference to me, one way or the other, whether I'm going to enjoy the book or whether I would buy it. I think it's effective and I don't think there's any stigma."

Author Alison Wearing, who recently published the memoir Confessions of a Fairy's Daughter, feels differently.

"It cheapens the experience of the book for me. It commercializes it," said the Stratford, Ont.-based writer/performer.

What's hot this summer

The summer movie season has begun on theatre screens across the country. September will mark the beginning of Oscar season, but from now until August our minds are free to turn to sun-bleached mush — and occasionally take in brainier fare.

MATT PRIGGE
Metro World News in New York

Is World War Z worth missing a summer night for? HANDOUT

This is the End

What: The Apatow boys play "themselves" at a Hollywood party taking place during the apocalypse. Not to be confused with Edgar Wright's forthcoming The World's End, which is also a drunken comedy about the apocalypse.

Why: Michael Cera and others get amusingly offed.

Why not: The Apatow clan has been running a bit on fumes lately. A self-referential, valedictory romp after a string of bombs seems a bit desperate.

The Bling Ring

What: Sofia Coppola returns with her version of a crime saga about girls, led by Emma Watson, who use the Internet to track celebrities' whereabouts and rob their homes. Based on a real story.

Why: Coppola has her problems, but they're often the same as her gifts. No one makes movies like her, which is to say no one is making films about the insularity of privilege with actual insight into the insularity of privilege.

Why not: "Paris Hilton as herself."

Berberian Sound Studio

What: Toby Jones plays a sound designer hired by questionable Italian producers to work on a "giallo," one of the sleazy Italian thriller films prevalent during the '70s.

Why: Director Peter Strickland ably captures the "giallo" mood — which is their major selling point — as well as casts Jones.

Why not: This isn't for everybody. Is that a negative?

White House Down

What: Remember that movie that just came out where 1600 Pennsylvania Ave was invaded? This is totally different.

Why: Channing Tatum, as a secret service agent, is a big step-up from Gerard Butler.

Why not: Roland Emmerich last made a movie about how Shakespeare didn't write the works of Shakespeare.

Much Ado About Nothing

What: Hot off directing the third highest grossing film ever (The Avengers), Joss Whedon turns to Shakespeare, the second greatest writer ever (after Stan Lee, of course), with some of his usuals (Nathan Fillion, Amy Acker) filling out the Bard's comedy of errors.

Why: Even if everyone's terrible, it's still Much Ado About Nothing.

Why not: Some of the cast are reportedly terrible. And even with Keanu Reeves, it would be hard to top Kenneth Branagh's 1993 version.

After Earth

What: M. Night Shyamalan sucks into his orbit fellow Philadelphian Will Smith and his son Jaden, who play humans returning to a post-apocalyptic earth in a film that is in no way Oblivion.

Why: Will Smith is a very good actor.

Why not: You know what? M. Night Shyamalan is too easy to mock. Let's hope he's found a premise that will actually drive his creative juices, as with Signs — but without the garbage ending, as with Signs.

Man of Steel

What: Bryan Singer's continuation of the '70s/'80s Superman films "only" grossed $400 million, so it's time for another reboot. James Cavill, who was awful in Immortals, is the new Clark Kent/S-Man.

Why: Michael Shannon as General Zod! From the trailer it looks like producer Christopher Nolan strongarmed director Zack Snyder into not being like himself.

Why not: Can someone please make more fun superhero movies, just for more variety? Comics were once a bit more sprightly than these heavy broodfests.

World War Z

What: It's the apocalypse — again! But with zombies! Again!

Why: Brad Pitt is a very good actor.

Why not: Marc Forster made Quantum of Solace, the only Bond film to actually be boring. That's impressive. In a way. Also, reshoots are always a good sign, yes?

Frances Ha

What: Noah Baumbach (The Squid and the Whale) reunites with his Greenberg leading lady/It Girl Greta Gerwig for this low-budget, B&W ode to the French New Wave.

Why: Baumbach is an acerbic genius and Gerwig is refining her unique, laid-back screen presence with every film, without becoming a stock ingenue.

Why not: Baumbach needs to reunite with his Kicking and Screaming stars, including Chris Eigeman, Carlos Jacott and Josh Hamilton. Just because.

Before Midnight

What: Richard Linklater returns for a third time to Julie Deply and Ethan Hawke's Celine and Jesse, the would-be lovers who meet in Before Sunrise, now a couple with twins.

Why: See "What."

Why not: Because you hate yourself and all things good?

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

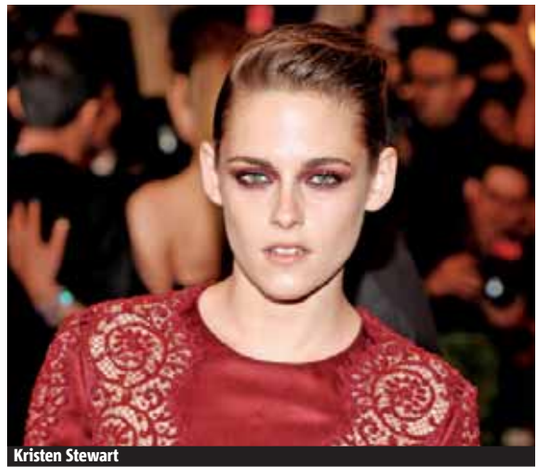
The Word

My first name ain't Baby, it's Billionaire

Janet Jackson isn't doing too bad for herself: After several decades in the entertainment industry, the singer and actress has reportedly hit billionaire status, according to Variety.

Jackson's income has included $458 million for concert tours, $260 million from album sales and $304 million for film and TV work, plus more than $81 million from sponsorship deals.

With the new income milestone, Jackson joins an elite club that also includes her husband, Wissam Al Mana, who became a billionaire thanks to investments in the Middle East.



Kristen Stewart

Stewart wasn't so Swift to seek out Taylor's sympathy

OK, so maybe Kristen Stewart didn't seek breakup advice from Taylor Swift after all. Despite reports earlier this week, sources insist to E! News that the Twilight actress did not in fact hightail it to Swift's Beverly Hills home in the wake of her split from Robert Pattinson. "They know each other and they are friends, but they didn't see each other," a source says of the young women.

Taco, the next generation

Top chefs share their ideas for making over everyone's favourite build-it-yourself meal

Cali Vegetarian

Santa-Barbara-based food and garden blogger Valerie Rice (Eat Drink Garden) uses lentils as the base for her taco, simmering them with tomato, garlic, red pepper, and a dash each of cumin and smoked paprika. The lentils get packaged in a soft corn tortilla and topped with items such as roasted tomatillo salsa and guacamole. "My first go-round with these I wasn't sure how it would go over with my meat-loving husband and sometimes picky daughters," Rice wrote in an email. "But they were a total hit and now are part of our dinnertime rotation."

Persian-Inspired

Toss shredded chicken in a sauce of pomegranate molasses, lime juice and honey. Stuff the meat into a taco shell (or wrap it in a flour tortilla or even Middle Eastern flatbread) and top with yogurt, fresh basil, mint, scallions, tomato, cucumber and plenty of sumac. "This is a classic combination of Persian ingredients," Louisa Shafia, author of The New Persian Kitchen, wrote in an email. "Crushed purple sumac berries are tart and salty and a must have for conjuring the authentic flavour of Middle Eastern cuisine."

Pig-in-a-Taco

Stick a pork tenderloin in the slow cooker until it practically melts, suggests Marie Simmons, author of the new cookbook, Taste of Honey. Shred the meat, then toss it with a sweet-spicy barbecue sauce made by simmering honey, chipotle peppers packed in adobo sauce, ketchup, soy sauce, cumin, chili powder, garlic and a swig of cider vinegar for about 10 minutes, or until thick. Top the taco with avocado, thinly sliced radishes and a shredded jicama-and-carrot slaw dressed with chopped cilantro and lime juice.

Steak House

Season a flat-iron steak with salt and pepper, then sear it on the grill, suggests Washington, D.C. chef Spike Mendelsohn, who plans to open a steak frites restaurant called Bearnaise this summer. Wrap thin slices of the steak and pickled red onions inside a soft corn taco and serve with warm bearnaise sauce for dipping. "I love the idea of eating a steak without sharpening my knives," Mendelsohn said via email. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Liquid Assets

Counting calories

LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell

liquidassets@eastlink.ca

I never thought I'd see the day when calorie-counting would be the latest wine trend.

After all, the belly-expanding issue with booze comes from its sugar and alcohol. Wines tend to have low quantities of both, with the average white or red containing about 140 calories per five ounce glass.

I guess when you're watching your weight even that can equal lots of squats. Who came to the rescue? Why, a former real housewife of New York City.

Bethenny Frankel, reality star and business mogul, started her Skinnygirl line of adult beverages so she could enjoy a guilt-free Margarita. After her company sold for bags of dough, the concept was unleashed on wine lovers.

At 100 calories per five ounce serving, the Skinnygirl 2011 California Red ($14.99) hasn't downplayed the alcohol (a respectable 12 per cent) in its freshly crushed blackberry fruit flavour that ends with a bright, juicy finish.

While it's a chillable red that will match with most summertime menus, the skinny on this girl is that she may taste best all by herself. PRICES REFLECT THE RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. SOME PRODUCTS MAY NOT BE AVAILABLE IN ALL PROVINCES.

Opening soon: Buckstop

Head to Denman's newest little hotspot for some classic barbecue cuisine served up in serious small-plate style. Tuck into a spot at their custom, reclaimed wood bar as you sip a classic cocktail (or their killer Sangria) and indulge in seriously good grilled bites. Sink your teeth into buttermilk calamari, succulent pork belly and save room for their smoked Gouda grilled cheese. Bonus: they will stay open until 2 a.m., perfect for those extra late-night hankerings. buckstop.ca.

Portobello West summer market

Gear up for summer and be sure to pop down to the Creekside Community Centre this Saturday and Sunday to check out the latest offerings courtesy of Portobello West. Featuring hundreds of local designers' hand-crafted wares, jewellery, clothing, home accessories and more, it's the perfect place to score unique finds. The popular pop-up artisan market runs both days from 11 a.m. until 5 p.m. For more information and to get a full list of vendors participating, visit: portobellowest.com.

Opening soon: Bestie

It's been a long time coming, so bratwurst fans and sausage aficionados can rest assured that early next month the doors will finally open at Chinatown's most anticipated new restaurant, Bestie (105 E. Pender Street). Fuelled by a penchant for good food, co-owners Clinton McDougall and Dane Brown went to work by garnering start-up funds through Indigogo. Look for plenty of craft beer, an updated take on German street eats, and classic currywurst and hand-cut fries. bestie.ca.

New receiving set the focal point of Lions' camp

The B.C. Lions' receiving corps, and the numerous changes it has undergone this off-season, continues to be a focal point of attention with training camp less than two weeks away.

Thursday at their Surrey facility, the Lions formally introduced Emmanuel Arceneaux, two days after making it official that he came to terms on a deal with the local Canadian Football League team, bringing him to Vancouver for a second time.

The Lions have also agreed to terms on a deal with import receiver Courtney Taylor, although that has yet to be officially announced.

While Arceneaux stood in front of a team backdrop, answering questions on everything from his return to the Lions, his two-year venture to the National Football League and his favourite movies, his head coach was gladly willing to talk about what will be a fierce competition among his crop of receivers at training camp in Kamloops.

"Competition breeds success," said Mike Benevides, the Lions' sophomore head coach.

"I think it's going to be a tremendously competitive camp and that's a good thing because it's going to bring the most out of people." CAM TUCKER/METRO

'I'm contracted with Vancouver': Miller

MLS. Whitecaps striker addresses persistent rumours of return to former club in Scotland

In his own words, Kenny Miller doesn't "live on another planet," meaning he's aware of the persistent rumours of him heading back to Scotland.

For months, Miller's name has been linked to a return to Rangers in Glasgow. The latest scuttlebutt reared itself Monday, when media in Vancouver got wind of a report in the Scottish Sun stating that a deal to bring Miller back to Rangers could be completed by Thursday of this week.

The Evening Times published an article with Miller's old teammate Kris Boyd, saying, "Kenny's made his decision and he wants to come back home. He'll do well for Rangers."

After four days off following a 2-2 draw with the Portland Timbers on Saturday, members of the Vancouver Whitecaps returned to training Thursday at UBC.

Miller, who hasn't played since March 30 due to a nagging hamstring injury, was on the pitch.

He spoke to reporters following the session, hoping to douse the fires of speculation currently roaring around him and his future in Vancouver.

"I'm contracted with Vancouver until the end of the season, so it's as simple as that," said Miller, the Whitecaps' 33-year-old striker.

"Obviously you can't control what's said or written by other parties but for me I've just been firmly focused on getting back on the field for Vancouver."

Friends and family keep Miller, who has had two spells with Rangers, apprised of such rumours of a return to his old club.

"I think this particular one becomes frustrating because I've had to stand here in front of you maybe for the fourth time now and pretty much say the same thing," said Miller.

The Rangers are under a transfer embargo until Sept. 1.

Whitecaps head coach Martin Rennie has spent the last few days trying to affirm his player is happy in Vancouver.

There's a good chance, said Rennie, that Miller could return to the lineup on May 29.

Time for Lochte to get into the pool and out of the spotlight

Swimming. Olympic gold medallist still taking his sport seriously as 2013 season approaches

Ryan Lochte did many things after dominating at the 2012 London Olympics — except swim.

The U.S. swimming star, who won five gold medals in London, was featured in his own reality show called What Would Ryan Lochte Do? He also appeared on talk shows and made TV cameo appearances.

"It's been a whirlwind," Lochte said in an interview before a training session Thursday at UBC, in advance of this weekend's 50th annual Mel Zajac Jr. International meet.

Olympic swimmer Ryan Lochte has to get used to life back in the pool. MIKE COPPOLA/GETTY IMAGES

"I've been doing a lot of unique stuff outside of the pool that has been really good for me — I mean for my image, for my brand," he said. "So it's been a fun opportunity to just get out there and get outside my normal environment of just the swimming pool."

Lochte, a 28-year-old native of Rochester, N.Y., who now lives in Florida, is getting used to life in the pool again following a seven-month break that allowed him to recharge his body and mind. The reality show was a good experience because he was able to be himself, although it has fared poorly in ratings.

In a UBC pool full of young Canadian swimming hopefuls, most of whom have not been to the world championships or Olympics, Lochte stood out like a shark among guppies. Canadian coach Tom Johnson said Lochte has set the standard for swimmers around the world.

NBA

Pending free agency not on coach's mind

Lionel Hollins has been more successful than any Grizzlies coach and will be a free agent after June 30.

He has the Grizzlies in the Western Conference finals for the first time and has won more games with this team than any other coach.

He probably wouldn't have a problem getting another job, but is very happy with the one he has. And he's not worrying about what the future holds.

"I have a job," Hollins said. "I'm happy with where we are and excited about what we're doing. That's my only concern. Everything else is irrelevant."

New owners took over in November and decided to wait until after the season to see what they had before extending contracts. That has made Hollins a popular potential candidate for other openings.

Before you make an important decision, make sure you have covered all the angles and not left any loose ends that might trip you up. The devil, as always, is in the details.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Your larger-than-life personality will get a boost from today's Venus-Mercury link in your sign. Someone who was hoping you might take a lower profile will be disappointed.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
If someone seems to be taking too much of an interest in your private affairs, you must tell them to get lost. You may have to say it more than once, and louder than you would like, before they get the message.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
You are not the first person to walk a certain path, so why not make your journey easier by following in the footsteps of those who have been there and done it before you?

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
At some stage today, it will be obvious that going it alone is not an option. You need the help of people whose talents in certain areas are superior to your own. Success is mainly about co-operation.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You will indulge even more so than usual over the next 24 hours. The good things in life are there to be enjoyed and you have every intention of getting your share — and then some.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It may feel as if the pressure is building and because of the approaching eclipse you won't be as self-assured as you usually are, but there is no need to panic. It will all turn out right in the end.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Are you taking someone for granted? According to the planets you are and what happens today will remind you how much you owe them emotionally. Make an effort to remind them you care.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You need to keep your wishful thinking under control. Even though you are down-to-earth by nature, you do enjoy your flights of fancy. Just make sure you don't fly too high.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Today's Venus-Mercury link in the most creative area of your chart urges you to do something of an artistic nature. What is it you enjoy doing more than anything else? Make time for it in your schedule.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
If you want something, you will find a way to get it — even if you know it is wrong. That's your choice to make, but what might it do to people you love? Think carefully. SALLY BROMPTON
